

Zurich, main station, complete refurbishment of the south wing.

The gateway to Bahnhofstrasse.

With high ceilings and covered promenades, the south wing (built in 1871) and the imposing hall made from sandstone constitute a true architectural gem. They form the hub between the main station and Bahnhofstrasse. After 150 years, a complete renovation is now necessary in order to preserve the building and take account of the requirements of today. The food/drink, office and service areas also benefit from the extensive renovation of the historic building.
